1970 Joseph Amato (PhD) sends an update. He writes: "Since leaving Rochester in 1966 a half century ago, and completing my published dissertation on Mounier and Maritain: A French Catholic Understanding of the Modern World (Catholic University of America Press) under the insightful and generous guidance of Professor A. W. Salomone, I have had a single teaching and minor administrative career principally at one place: Southwest Minnesota State University in Marshall, Minnesota. There I taught, administered, and created the history department and a unique program of rural and regional studies. Aside from the glories and scuffles of making and keeping a small college afloat, my devotion has been to my wife, Catherine Bavolack Amato '66N, and four children, while my mounting "madness" is writing. I have written, coauthored, and published almost 40 books and numerous essays. My writing has ranged, perhaps strayed, across three areas: local, family, and regional history; memoirs focused on a reflective boy in love with a future in golf and midlife bypass surgery; and finally and principally, intellectual and cultural history." His most recent book, published this spring, is My Three Sicilies: Stories, Poems, and History (New York Bordighera). Another book, Everyday Life: A Short History (Reaktion Books), is sched-
