Diagnosed with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, Judy DiMarzo faced years of treatment, remission and recurrence. Through it all, she maintained a quiet resolve and sought to focus on others and put them at ease. "Providing hope for those who face cancer is the best tribute to her determination and courage," said her husband, Richard DiMarzo. Richard's generosity helped launch the Judy DiMarzo Clinical Cancer Survivorship Program in 2012. As the first clinical cancer survivorship program in upstate New York, it brings the world's best research on cancer survivorship into the hands of patients and primary care physicians.

All funds raised during the Wilmot Warrior Walk will contribute to:

- Development of care plans for specific cancers and treatments that are informed by cutting-edge research.
- Funding educational visits for cancer survivors to review their care plans and treatment summaries.
- Educational initiatives in the region to help primary care providers gain information about how to best care for cancer survivors.
- Cancer research at the Wilmot Cancer Institute.

To date, the Wilmot Warrior Walk has raised more than $140,000 to support the Judy DiMarzo Cancer Survivorship Program at the Wilmot Cancer Institute.
